"Soap" is a good clean story. It concerns an honest farmer taking a bath.

There is only one thing "off color" about the whole story, and that is the treachery of the cake of soap.

Believe me or not old Al, even with the help of Algerone Cat, couldn't for the life of him, hold on the darn slippery stuff. Well, anyway its slipping away and Algeron's handing it back, also the fat headed mice finding out that the soap was good to slide on, eventually caused a lot of trouble, honest-to-Gawd it did. I ain't kidding you.

And Bye'M'Bye, just before Al finishes his bath, the mice pour a whole bucket of coal into the tub, and Al has to start all over again.

Then these mice get a lot of wet soap and they rub it on the bottom of Al's shoes, and also on the rockers of his favorite cozy chair. When Al slips on his shoes and stands up, he slides all over the place. He ends up on his front porch and spies his little rocker, he manages to reach it and starts to sit down, when the chair slips and shoots over the hill. This flying chair crowns a police captain right back of the left ear. He picks himself up and with his seven bloodhounds they start for Al's house. They find him trying to hold on to his front porch. The end of it all shows Al skidding all over the road, running for dear life, from the cop and his ferocious bloodhounds.
